

50 Years of Skydiving - the Main Event

A mid-summer skydiving celebration honoring the "first man in space" is the centerpiece for one of the biggest fundraising events yet planned for the National Skydiving Museum. Fifty years ago, Air Force Capt. Joe Kittinger exited at 102,800 feet from a helium balloon over New Mexico, reaching a speed of 614 mph during a four-and-a-half minute free fall. The record still stands today, although there have been several attempts to better it.

The "National Skydiving Museum Weekend Honoring Joe Kittinger" will be held in DeLand, Florida the weekend of August 13-15. Kittinger's jump was on August 16, 1960. Kittinger, who retired as a colonel and is now 81, plans to attend, as well as other skydiving luminaries. There will also be several activities during the weekend benefiting the Boy Scouts of America, another cause Kittinger supports, to commemorate their 100th Anniversary.

One highlight will be a 50-way formation, organized by B.J. Worth, museum trustee, chairman of the board of the United States Parachute Association and well-known as the stuntman in several James Bond movies. Worth also was one of the key organizers of the world record 400-way formation in Thailand.

The weekend will also commemorate the modern history of sport parachuting, roughly speaking about 50 years. (Skydivers are consummate debaters and determining the "beginning" of the sport has been nearly impossible to pinpoint.) One thing is certain. . . the sport has progressed dramatically in the past half century.

Several exhibition jumps are planned including swooping – canopy gliding across the ground or water, accuracy (one of the "classic" events), and wingsuit free fall formations. The wingsuit is a relatively new innovation where large-surface area jumpsuits allow skydivers to glide horizontally for great distances during their descent. The U.S. Air Force Academy has been invited to skydive into the event to honor their former officer and world record holder. The U.S. Army demonstration team, the Golden Knights, has also been invited to drop in during the festivities.

Skydiving Activities and Exhibitions . . .

Here are just a few of the events that will honor Joe Kittinger and celebrate 50+ years of skydiving history including giving special recognition to other pioneers for their contributions to our sport. (schedule subject to change)

Jumping for Joe 50-Way Formation Skydiving

This 50-way formation with some of the best skydivers in the country will celebrate and symbolize 50 years since Joe Kittinger's record breaking jump. Canopies opening in an almost simultaneous rhythm will have the audience cheering until the last skydiver lands.

Swooping Exhibition

Swooping truly shows how far parachute equipment has come over the years. Swooping is gliding a high performance parachute across the ground or water for long distances, generally a slalom type course, to show the skill of the canopy pilot. The exhibition will have some of the top swooping demo jumpers in both individual and team exhibitions.

Accuracy Competition

Accuracy goes way back in our history but didn't get the recognition it deserved until the Sixth World Parachuting Championships held for the first time in the U.S. at Orange, MA. Accuracy canopies in those days were modified military surplus equipment with very little steerability. Today, high performance accuracy canopies and the skill of jumpers make for exciting and competitive accuracy contests.

Skydiving Demonstrations

Precision skydiving demos the world famous Army Parachute Team (Golden Knights) and the Air Force Academy Parachute Team.

Wingsuit Flying Exhibition

Grand finale and tribute to Joe Kittinger wingsuit flying truly exhibits the dream of human flight. Ten to 15 of the premier wingsuit flyers in the world will fly formations across the sky with smoke to add to the effect of this spectacular jump.

Marc Middleton, a Florida-based television and radio producer, plans on creating a documentary around Kittinger's feat and the weekend's events.

There will be a number of exhibits displaying the lineage of parachuting equipment by various sponsor manufacturers.

The Saturday evening dinner will be devoted to honoring the initial class of inductees into the National Skydiving Museum Hall of Fame. A special committee carefully selected eleven honorees, culled from a list of skydivers who made major lifelong contributions in equipment design, free fall techniques, and those who excelled in national and international competitions.

This fundraiser is part of the National Skydiving Museum's $5 million capital program that will raise the necessary funds to build the museum in Fredericksburg, VA. (story contributed by Doug Garr)

National Skydiving Museum Hall of Fame—Class of 2010

The National Skydiving Museum is proud to introduce the inaugural Class of 2010 inductees into its Hall of Fame.
